Tomkins; treasurer, Mrs. H. G. Welton; treasurer of sinking fund, Mrs. Charles Kachel; mite box secretary, Mrs. T. O. McNeff, and her assistants, Mrs. E. E. Berner and Mrs. J. M. Sartin; literary secretary, Mrs. George Wyman; jubilee secretary, Mrs. E. S. Abernethy; extension secretary, Mrs. Hiram Krueghbaum; and the following superintendents: Literature, Mrs. H. L. The next meeting will be held at the church Nov. 5.

Miss Anna Hafner, 1212 W. Jefferson blvd., entertained members of the Clio club with a Liberty party Tuesday evening. A new member, Miss Dorothy Kleiser, was admitted to the club. Following the business session a fourth Liberty loan contest was held, prizes being awarded to Miss Irene Sechrist and Miss Ethel Delcamp. A luncheon was served, covers being laid for 10. The next meeting will be held on Oct. 22, at the home of Miss Sechrist, 1212 E. Indiana av.

"Watchman, What of the Night," was the subject chosen by Mrs. John E. Moore of Kokomo, president of the Indiana Federation of Clubs, for her talk before members of the South Bend Woman's club Tuesday night. Mrs. Moore told of club women in the past, in the present, and prophesied as to the future.

She complimented the clubs on the way in which they have taken up war activities, but warned them against the danger of abandoning their cultural work. In connection with the reconstruction period which will follow the war, she emphasized the part which club life must be made to play in the lives of the young women of the nation, so many of whom will be bereft of the flower of the nation's manhood.

Other speakers on the program were Mrs. A. J. Dillon of Rochester, chairman of the 13th district of the federated clubs, and Mrs. E. K. Montgomery of Shelbyville, state chairman of cooperative work among the blind. Mrs. Dillon spoke generally of the work accomplished by the 13th district, and Mrs. Montgomery told how the state federation came to be identified with the work for the blind.

A special display of the handicraft work of the blind women of the state was on exhibit, and the members were urged to make an annual sale of such articles a part of their club work.

Mrs. E. J. Ridgway rendered vocal selections, accompanied by Miss Valeria Bondurant, and Miss Dorothea Keegan played a number of piano solos.

At the business meeting preceding the program 22 new members were admitted to the club and delegates were elected to the state convention to be held at Indianapolis Oct. 22-25. They are Mrs. B. D. Coon and Mrs. John C. Paxson, with Mrs. H. J.

Bennett and Mrs. Lillian Kreighbaum as alternates.

At 5:45 o'clock Tuesday afternoon the speakers on the evening program were guests at dinner of the board of managers at the Lexington tea room.

The next general club meeting will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 15. The program in charge of the current history department will include the lecture on "The Valley of Democracy," by Meredith Nicholson, an interpretative dance, "On to Victory," by little Miss Jane Dennis, and vocal selections by Mrs. Harry N. REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

By Adele Garrison

HOW DR. PETTIT SOLVED THE MYSTERY OF GRACE DRAPER'S DELIRIUM.

As Dr. Pettit turned from Lillian and me, when I had declared my intention of keeping my promise to stay with Grace Draper until her death, and strode toward the bed where the sick girl lay, apparently raving in delirium, I called out to him in horror.

"Oh! don't disturb that delirious dying girl!"

I made an impetuous step forward to stop him when Lillian caught my arm and whirled me into a recess of the alcove.

"You unsuspecting little idiot," she said, giving me a tender little shake that robbed the words of their harshness. "Can't you see that that girl is shamming?"

For a moment I could not comprehend what she meant; then the full truth burst upon me. If what Lillian said were true, if the girl was pretending delirium that she might utter words concerning Dicky's infatuation for which would torture me, then it was more than probable, almost certain, in fact, that there was no word of truth in her pretended delirious mutterings.

Dicky was not faithless to me, as I had feared during the tortured moments in which I had listened to the girl's ravings.

The joy of the sudden revelation almost unnerved me. I believe I would have swooned and fallen had not Lillian caught me.

"Listen," she said in my ear, pinching my arm almost cruelly to arouse me, "listen to what Dr. Pettit is saying, and you'll see that I am right."

My eyes followed hers to the bed where Dr. Pettit stood gazing down upon the seemingly unconscious girl and speaking in a measured, merciful fashion.

"This won't do, my girl," he was saying, and his tone and manner of address seemed in some subtle fashion to strip all semblance of dignity from the girl, and leave her simply a "case" of the doctor's, of a type only too familiar to him.

"It won't do," he repeated. "You are simply shamming this delirium, and you are lessening your chances for life every minute you persist in it. I'm sorry to be hard on you, but I'm going to give you an ultimatum right now. Either you will release Mrs. Graham from her promise at once and quit this nonsense, or I shall call an officer, report the truth to the court-martial, and you will be arrested not only upon a charge of attempted suicide, but of attempted murder."

"Of course, you will then be removed to the jail hospital, where I am afraid you may not enjoy the skillful care you are getting now. And, if you live, the after effects of these charges will be exceedingly unpleasant for you."

My heart almost stopped beating as I listened to the physician's relentless words.

"What are you going to say to her?" the physician shot back.

A Release and Prophecy. "That's my business and hers," Miss Draper returned, with a flash of her old spirit. "If you want a release from that promise you'd better let her come over here, otherwise I'll hold her to it."

Disregarding Lillian's clutch upon my arm I moved swiftly to the side of the bed and looked down into the sick girl's eyes, brilliant with fever. "Do you wish to speak to me?" I asked gently.

"Yes," she said abruptly. "I release you from your promise, and you are free to believe or not what I have said during my delirium."

She emphasized the last word with a little mocking smile. The same smile was on her lips as she added, slowly, sneeringly:

"But you will never know, will you, Madge dear, just how much of what I said was false and how much true?"

Her eyes held mine a moment longer, and the malice in their feverish brightness frightened me. Then she closed them wearily.

As I turned away from her bedside I realized that she had prophesied only too truthfully. There would be times in my life when I would believe Dicky only. But I was also afraid there would be others when her words would come back to me with intensified power to sear and scar.

Inquiries have been received in regard to refreshments between meals. In reply I must emphasize again the regulation that has been in force for many months. The world food situation is such that we must not waste any food or consume any unnecessarily. We must be satisfied with three meals a day. Refreshments between meals are an aid and comfort to the enemy. Ice cream, suppers and sales of food for money-raising purposes which tend to increase food consumption are unpatriotic. This applies to money raised for war work just as much as for any other purpose. To run the risk of starving a soldier in order to buy yarn to knit him a sweater is foolish patriotism.

Church suppers and the like can, however, be made very good things from a food conservation standpoint if proper menus and proper methods are used.

Perhaps the least waste of food is accomplished by the cafeteria system, where each helps himself to the food which he desires. By this time most people are pretty well trained not to take things which they will not eat. These menus come from the United States food administration and may be helpful: Baked Beans and Brown Bread, Escalloped Potatoes au Gratin...

Barley or Oatmeal Muffins. Cabbage Salad. Apple Sauce. Ice Cream Cake (Victory Flour) (Other sweeteners than sugar.)

Sliced Cold Meat. Creamed Potatoes. Cornmeal Spoon Bread. Buttered Carrots. String Bean Pickles. Floating Island Custard.

Potato and Meat Pie. Green Peas or Baked Tomatoes. Victory Bread and Butter. Cabbage and Pepper Salad. Baked Pears. Oatmeal Cookies.

"You've Called the Turn." Suppose Dr. Pettit was mistaken and the girl should be really delirious, after all. But just as I had reached the point of torturing doubt hardly to a boy, the girl stopped her delirious muttering, opened her eyes and looked steadily up at the physician.

"You devil," she said, at last, with quiet malignity. "You've called the turn. I throw up my hands."

"I thought so." This was the physician's only response. He stood quietly waiting while the girl gazed steadily, unwinkingly at him.

"Tell me," she said at last, coolly. "Am I going to die?"

"I do not know," the physician returned, as coolly. "You have a slight temperature, and I am afraid infection has developed. But I can tell you that your performance of the last hour or two has not helped your chances any. You must be perfectly quiet and obedient, conserve every bit of strength if you wish to live."

"How about that very chivalric threat you made just now," the girl retorted, sneeringly. "If I live, are you going to have me arrested for this thing?"

"Not if you behave yourself and promise to make no more trouble," the physician replied gravely.

There was another long silence. The girl lay with eyes closed. The physician stood watching her keenly. Presently she opened her eyes again.

"Call Mrs. Graham over here," she said peremptorily.

"What are you going to say to her?" the physician shot back.

A Release and Prophecy. "That's my business and hers," Miss Draper returned, with a flash of her old spirit. "If you want a release from that promise you'd better let her come over here, otherwise I'll hold her to it."
